

THE PROBLEM

Half of all pregnancies in America are unplanned. Tragically, women facing unintended pregnancies often make desperate, life-and-death decisions because they feel overwhelmed and unprepared. They're unsure about what to do, how to feel, and where to turn. In their desperation, they chose abortion as a way to remove the real or perceived relational, economic, and/or logistical challenges before them, and as a way to restore normalcy to their lives.

The problem is even more prevalent in California. The state's 16.4 abortions per 1,000 women is higher than the national abortion rate of 13.5. In fact, California represents 15.4% of all the abortions performed in America, and more than one in five (22%) California pregnancies end in abortion. Worse, these startling statistics are derived only from reported numbers, as abortion reporting in California is voluntary. Factoring in the thriving black market of "self-managed" abortions, we know that there are many more abortions for which there is no accounting.

Too many precious lives in the Bay Area are hurt and lost because of the fear caused by unintended pregnancies.
